

THE CASE KOJAK COULDN'T SOLVE

TV cop, Telly Savalas admits one real life case would have made his hair stand on end, if he had any.

He says: "I went into a coffee shop to ask the way to a gas station and was told to walk down the road towards a freeway. I had just started walking when I heard someone ask in a high-pitched voice whether I wanted a lift. I turned and saw a guy in a black Cadillac. I got in and he drove me to the gas station. He even loaned me a dollar to buy the stuff. I insisted that I would have to pay him back, and he wrote down his name and number so that I could return the money. His name was Harry Agannis."

Savalas says that soon afterwards he telephoned the number and asked for Agannis. "A woman answered the phone. She told me that Harry Agannis was her husband - BUT THAT HE HAD BEEN DEAD FOR THREE YEARS!"

Amazed and intrigued, Savalas decided to visit the woman. He took the piece of paper the man had given him. "I showed it to her and she told me it was definitely her husband's handwriting. I described the clothes the man was wearing, and she told me that they were the clothes he had been buried in."

DID SHELL OIL DISCOVER A UFO?

The Shell Oil Company oilrig, PACE-SETTER 2, was set up on the continental shelf, 90 miles off the coast of New Jersey, USA, in the area known as Georges Bank.

On their first drill test, they struck metal. Thinking it was a sunken ship or submarine from WWII, they checked with the War Dept and West Germany, but there were no records of losses in that area.

Sonar scans recorded an object approx 50 feet in diameter, in 600 feet of water.

On June 8th, 4 winches were lowered, and the object raised. The object was covered in barnacles, except near the top centre. It had small rectangular openings all the way around it.

When the barnacles were chipped off, a "flying saucer shape" was revealed. The Oil Rig boss immediately radioed his superiors in Atlantic City.

Three Shell officials arrived by helicopter, along with a physicist from Massachusetts Inst of Technology.

The preliminary inspections revealed that the object had been submerged for approx 600 years, contained equipment that was 'out of this world', and was made of a metal that was unidentifiable.

They discovered a basket-ball sized sphere of silvery appearance. When held at arms length, the object did not fall. (The ball was found in the exact centre of the craft.)

Another helicopter arrived containing 5 CIA agents who produced authorisation documents from THE WHITE HOUSE, and informed them that a ship was on its way to collect the craft.

The CIA tried to stop the physicist from dismantling the object any further, but a Shell Oil official told them that everything on the rig belonged to Shell Oil and they would not surrender the object until the ship arrived.

Further exploration by the Physicist revealed a cylindrical object with a red button on the end. When pressed a thin white ray shot out a travelled about a mile before petering out. An assortment of other gadgets was discovered, including a rod which produced a bolt of electricity resembling lightning, that punched a sizeable hole in clouds overhead, and a lump of "putty" like substance, which caused an immense explosion when a small piece was thrown into the sea.

The CIA ship arrived shortly after, and the agents on the ship started placing the strange looking gadgets into duffle bags. These along with the saucer and parts were then transferred to the ship.

The man who reported this returned to Atlantic City with Shell Officials. All men on the Rig were sworn to secrecy not to divulge any of these happenings.

No announcement about this object was ever released!

ANCIENT 'WALKMAN' FOUND IN CHINA

Chinese archeologists have uncovered an ancient object similar to a modern walkman headset, from a 2,500 year old skeleton in eastern China, the Wen Wei Po newspaper has reported.

Professor Han of Nanjing University, said the team found 'earphones and a black box' alongside an ancient skeleton in a wooden coffin, which had been placed in a cliff face in Jianghe, in Jiangxi Province.

According to Prof Han, 'the earphones were connected to a black box containing a silver plate with functions similar to a magnetic tape and a piece of violet crystal, which seems to be the power source'.

When placed over the ears and turned on, the Professor heard a strange song, believed to be a dirge summoning the dead to the underworld.

PHANTOM HITCH-HIKERS

An elderly couple driving home from a church service, picked up a hitch-hiker at nearby Urunga. Sitting in the back of the car, the man spotted a cross attached to the car keys in the ignition and asked the couple if they were Christians. When they replied they were, the man said: "Jesus is coming." Several seconds later, while the car was still travelling at a good speed, the woman looked around and discovered the hitch-hiker had vanished.

When the couple reported the incident to local police, they were told other motorists had reported similar happenings. So much so, they now refer to the man as The Angel of Urunga.

ATLANTIS FOUND BY JAPANESE SUBMARINE?

A Japanese research submarine filming what is believed to have been the ruins of Atlantis, cruised into an 'energy field' that caused near insanity with the crew, and caused instruments to run 'backwards'.

The encounter occurred several hundred miles east of the Azores, at the same location where a Soviet submarine reportedly encountered the 'lost city' in 1986. Portuguese authorities admit that the commander of the Japanese submarine did, in fact request emergency permission to dock at Ponta Delgada in the Azores, and sought immediate psychiatric help for many crew members.

EVERY YEAR THE USE OF LIVE-ANIMAL EXPERIMENTS IS INCREASING...

- 20 animals a second are dying in science laboratories world wide
 - There is no evidence that increases in the number of animal experiments lead to a corresponding improvement in human health
 - 70% of animal experiments are for non-medical purposes ie: cosmetics testing, fire-extinguishers, pesticides, detergents, and weapons
 - 80% of the experiments are performed without any anaesthetics
 - Animal experimentation is a multi-million dollar industry
 - Despite the vast expenditure on medical research, animals, and health care, people in today's developed societies are still not healthy!
 - Because of species differences it is impossible to apply the results of animal experiments to corresponding improvement in human health
 - Nowhere in the world do laws adequately protect laboratory animals
- Not included is a small range of cosmetics which, although they have not been tested on animals, do include unacceptable ingredients obtained from animals.
